

Junior Fellowship in Science, Religion, and Culture

2018

JOIN THE JUNIOR FELLOWS IN SCIENCE, RELIGION, AND CULTURE

Open to Master's students across Harvard with research interests in science, religion, and culture, the Junior Fellows Program is an opportunity for young scholars to develop their skills, grow their networks, and build solid foundations for future scholarship through the creation of publication-ready research projects.

The program provides year-long mentorship, professional development, and focused training in research methods and writing skills. Individually, fellows develop research projects and cultivate their professional skills under the guidance of faculty and doctoral students. As members of a lively academic community, fellows collaborate with their peers to refine their projects.

By the completion of the fellowship, fellows will have written a publishable research paper and presented their findings in the annual SRC research symposium. This training prepares fellows to apply to doctoral studies in various fields.
