

Program in Islamic Law at Harvard Law School: Fellowship applications open

Formerly under the rubric of the Islamic Legal Studies Program, we now announce a revamped Program in Islamic Law at Harvard Law School and the opening of applications for Visiting and Senior Fellowships. Applications are due Feb 1, 2019. Please direct questions to shariasource@law.harvard.edu.

Visiting Fellowships:

The Program in Islamic Law welcomes applicants with a JD, SJD, PhD or other comparable terminal degree from any field of study who are interested in spending a term or academic year in residence at Harvard Law School working on outstanding scholarly projects relating to SHARIASource. We seek applicants from a diverse range of backgrounds, academic traditions, and scholarly interests. Women and minorities are especially encouraged to apply. (Note: Applicants must reasonably expect to have been awarded their degree by the beginning of the appointment.) Full details. Apply to the Visiting Fellowship

Senior Fellowships:

The Program in Islamic Law is now accepting application for Senior Fellowships, which are designed to provide tenured professors in the field the opportunity to spend an academic year, semester, or shorter period in residence at Harvard Law School to conduct their own research. Successful applicants will be tenured professors with at least one published book. Full details. Apply to the Senior Fellowship
