

The Barns Studentship

The Queen's College, Oxford offers the Barns Studentship in Egyptology, named after Professor J W B Barns (1912–1974), which is open to those who intend to begin postgraduate research in Egyptology or are already undertaking such research.

The College proposes to elect a Barns Student with effect from 1 October 2018. Candidates must by then have passed all examinations required for the degree of Bachelor of Arts and will be required to become members of the College (if not already such) and to be either starting or already undertaking a postgraduate research degree in Egyptology at Oxford.

The Studentship will be set at the level of the University and College graduate fee, plus a maintenance grant of £13,726. The Studentship is for one year only; if awarded to a student starting a degree, re-election for further years is possible, subject to the satisfactory academic progress of the holder and Governing Body approval. The maximum length of the Studentship will normally be no more than three years.
