

We are thrilled to announce that applications have now opened for UIR's Summer Arabic Program for non-native speakers.

This six-week program, taking place June 12 2017 through July 22 2017, emphasizes intensive language education and cultural immersion, making it the perfect accompaniment to humanities, social sciences and language degrees.

Students will study Modern Standard Arabic and the colloquial Moroccan dialect, also called "Darija" in Morocco. Alongside the language instruction, they will also be treated to cultural activities and area-based studies twice a week. Topics for these studies include subjects such as Moroccan Popular Culture, Gender and Politics, Arts and Culture in Morocco, History of Moroccan Judaism, Gender and Feminism in Morocco, and more.

There will also be a host of trips and activities organized for students, including a visit to the ancient city of Fez, the most ancient capital of Morocco, and the famous Marrakech, host of the COP 22 World Climate Summit, and more.

Please be aware, the deadline for applications to the Summer Arabic Program is May 19th, 2017.

We would also like to let you know that UIR is offering Faculty-Led customized courses. These programs offer the opportunity for outside institutions to take advantage of UIR's excellent facilities and staff to provide accredited and high quality extra-curricular courses, in a highly customizable and tailored delivery.

Please find attached to this email documents detailing full information for both programs. Feel free to contact us for more information about our Summer Arabic Courses and Faculty-Led Programs at medina@uir.ac.ma
